DT/Gorsline

His records show that he charged for garage space for seven days. While the car was there he says that Johns spoke to him about it and in a joking way he suggested that may be that was the car which Gorsline claimed had been burned up. On October 29th, 1922 Fick paid Baier $3.00 charges, namely $1.25 for recharging the battery and $1.75 for garage space.

Baier thought nothing more about it until some time later when he was approached by some reporters from the Home News and he then showed his records. He does not recall ever having been interviewed by any State Trooper.

He told me that there was no doubt but that I had either directly or indirectly gotten my story through Johns. He seemed to think it was quite a joke that Johns had given it any serious thought.

Respectfully yours,

David Thompson
